Also known as "Mushroomwood," this texture is achieved by sculpting rich brown reclaimed softwoods that are naily and knotty. The texture is rough and rustic, and the color is a uniformed brown. Water-based finish can be added to make cleaning easier, as well as a ebony stain and water based finish to make it dark and dramatic.

Found under barns where animals once roamed, this product is typically only harvested during certain times of the year. Boards are unearthed and tend to have mushrooms growing on them. The degradation from the weight of the animals as well as the mushrooms and soil, allow this wood to form a unique textured appearance.
